Station House, home to seventeen Stationmasters and their families from 1883-1979, is a tangible reminder of the great railway expansion of the last century.

For more than one hundred years Station House has dominated the railway scene in Culcairn. Together with historic Railway Station the complex reflects the significance of Culcairn as a major rail junction of the steam era. Culcairn is now serviced by four XPT trains daily.

Station House has been faithfully restored and was the winner of the 1994 Tidy Towns Award for “Cultural & Heritage Protection”. The two story brick building with its beautiful wrought iron and stairway together with the original floors and ceilings presents one of the best examples of a building of its type in Australia. Station House is being refurbished with pieces of the period 1880 to 1890. Some rooms are now complete. Early railway memorabilia is also on display.

Set amongst beautiful lawns, garden and in a park area Station House compliments the many other historic buildings lining Culcairn’s main street. Many buildings have been restored including the Culcairn Hotel, built in 1891, then the largest hotel between Melbourne and Sydney. The School of Arts and Memorial Hall, together with many others are worthy of inspection.

A visit to Station House is a must for heritage lovers, railway enthusiasts, tourists and visitors.
